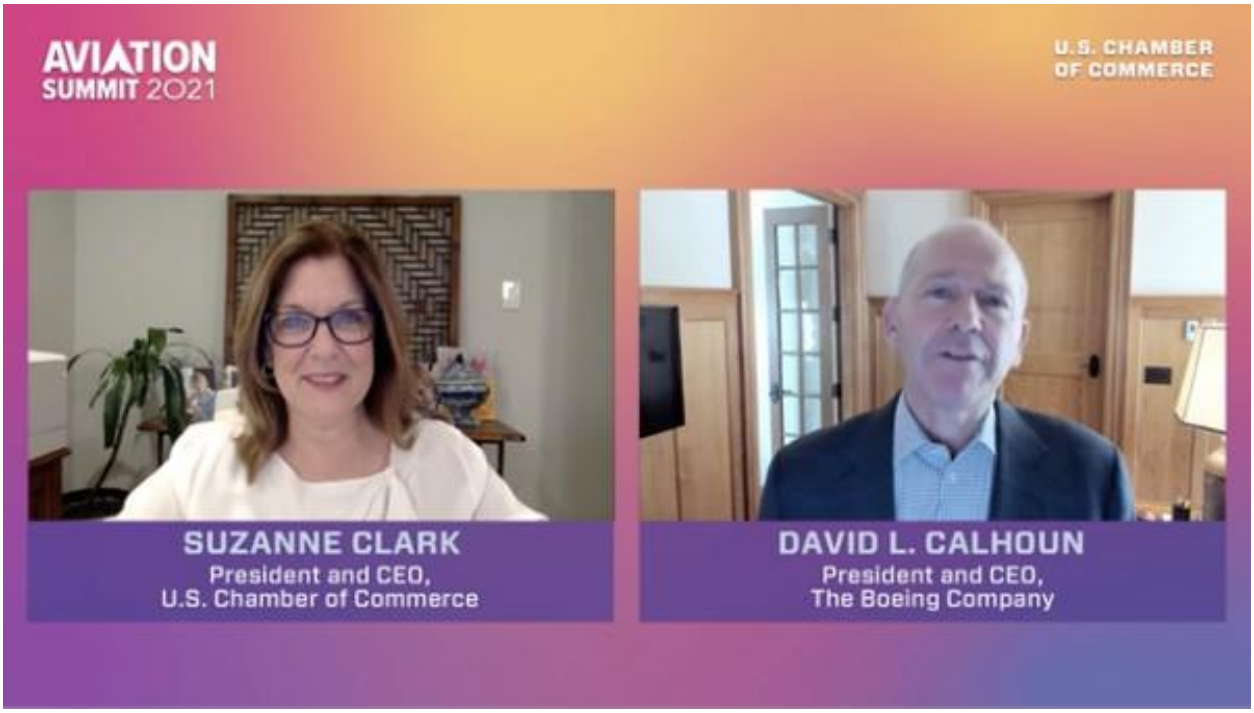
Where Is Aviation Headed?



At the Chamber's Aviation Summit on Wednesday, we heard from all corners of the aviation industry, on the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic and the path to recovery, including safe and widespread travel, as well as a looking toward the trends and technologies shaping the future of flight.

Key takeaways:

- "Travel will be back, and it will be robust," said Boeing President and CEO Dave Calhoun.
- "The more vaccines people get, the more safe they feel going into airports, going onto planes, going to travel locations, it will be good," said Kevin Burke, President and CEO, Airports Council International - North America
- The pandemic "validated some of our core principles. One of them is the importance of planning and preparation," explained Donald Colleran, President and Chief Executive Officer, FedEx Express. "Because we had a rigorous process, we were able to be as agile as we needed to be."

Read more:

- This Q&A blog post features some aviation industry CEOs, and what they see as the biggest component to ensuring the industry continues to innovate and move forward.

Watch