

Dr. José F. Cordero, M.D., M.P.H.
Dean, Graduate School of Public Health
University of Puerto Rico

Dr. José F. Cordero is Dean of the Graduate School of Public Health at the University of Puerto Rico. Previously, he was Assistant Surgeon General of the Public Health Service and Founding Director of the National Center on Birth Defects and Developmental Disabilities at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, Georgia, where he served for 27 years. He is an internationally recognized speaker and consultant in the field of public health that has served in many advisory committees, in the United States and with international agencies, such as the World Health Organization.

