

Driving the Debate on Pandemic Relief

As Congress works on much-needed pandemic relief, the Chamber continues putting the pressure on Washington to deliver.

Speaking out:

- “We have to do this,” said Chamber CEO Tom Donohue on Fox News’ Cavuto. “There’s a spirit on the Hill now with both parties to get this done. And I believe it will further us along the road to recovery.”
- “If Congress doesn’t come through with relief, [many \[small businesses\] will close permanently](#),” said Neil Bradley, Chamber Executive Vice President and Chief Policy Officer, on Fox 7 in Austin, TX.

Small business voices: “Small businesses are about to hit a dead end—if they haven’t already—and they need help,” writes Natalie Kaddas and Ian MacLean, small business owners and Small Business Council Chair and Vice-Chair for the U.S. Chamber, in a CNN.com op-ed. “Main Street needs financial support, or we will see unparalleled business closures this winter.”

Take action: Contact your Representatives in Congress urging them to support a bipartisan pandemic relief bill by using the Chamber’s “one-click” advocacy platform.

ICYMI: On relief negotiations, the Chamber’s Neil Bradley said, “More progress has been made in the last few days to securing pandemic relief than was made in many months.”

Learn More