American Airlines is proud to commit to Rally For Recovery to help defeat the pandemic and help the economy and communities rebound. Since the onset of the COVID-19 crisis, American Airlines has been integral in keeping essential goods moving and has now introduced several innovations to help provide peace of mind and convenience as passengers return to travel.

American responded to the pandemic at the very beginning. The airline was instrumental in getting citizens back to their home countries via repatriation flights, while also helping businesses and first responders do their jobs by transporting medical equipment and pharmaceuticals on its first cargo-only flights in over 35 years.

For the safety of both its customers and team members, American required face masks at all locations and on all points of the customer journey, enhanced cleaning procedures onboard aircraft and at airports, and worked to make testing more accessible. Additionally, the company partnered with organizations like the American Red Cross and Feeding America to help those in need. These partnerships have resulted in millions of dollars of donations and hundreds of thousands of pounds of food donated to food banks across the country.

As the airline works to connect its team members with COVID-19 vaccines through on-site clinics and an incentive program, American is also helping customers return to the air safely and confidently. This summer, travelers will notice touchless technologies from baggage checks to the terminal to the gate. They will also be able to enjoy hands-free access to select Admirals Club lounges, complete with touchless news and magazines to download and mobile ordering capabilities.
