Stanley Black & Decker has supported its staff, communities and essential workers throughout the COVID-19 crisis. Now, the company is eager to do its part to help achieve worldwide vaccination, and they are proud to commit to Rally For Recovery to help support this mission.

Throughout the pandemic, Stanley Black & Decker has focused on three priorities: keeping its staff and their families safe, ensuring continuity of operations and doing its part to help communities mitigate the effects of COVID-19. The company offered standard benefits such as PPE for staff & family and work-from-home options, but also created unique programs like a new Powered Air-Purifying Respirator in partnership with Ford and 3M. Additionally the company established a comprehensive COVID-19 response program where they tripled their charitable donations (with a particular focus on food scarcity and healthcare services), established a fund to help employees facing financial hardship, and matched employee contributions 2:1 throughout the year.

As we turn the corner into full vaccine availability, Stanley Black & Decker's goal is to arm not only its employees but also local communities with accurate, timely, and medically sound COVID-19 information and supplies. To date, the company has donated more than $1 million to assist with vaccine access in underserved communities around the world and to provide specific relief to India for critical care needs through GAVI, the Vaccine Alliance, and UNICEF. From partnerships with Health Action Alliance and the Ad Council that support educational campaigns to the appointment of a Chief Medical Officer who offers guidance to employees, Stanley Black & Decker is eager to help everyone see the light at the end of the tunnel.
